2008 NEWARK BLACK FILM FESTIVAL

34 YEARS OF DEFINING THE INDEPENDENT

The Newark Black Film Festival Continues

This year marks the thirty-fourth annual Newark Black Film Festival (NBFF), New Jersey's premier summer event for movie lovers. With large, diverse and supremely hip, the Festival now travels after Newark screenings, and happily so, to Trenton, Asbury Park and Camden. As in past years, the Festival proudly presents a rich array of films, including ones for children, that adds to our increasingly broad and sophisticated understanding of the black experience — its history, challenges, contributions and, most especially, its poignancy.

As one of the nation's oldest independent black film extravaganzas, the Festival is indebted to thousands of patrons who live and work across New Jersey and who revel in what can be learned about the human experience through the life and times of those in the African Diaspora. This year's Festival acknowledges the fortieth anniversary of the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., through a commemorative screening of Eyes on the Prize, the award-winning tour de force by the late Henry Hampton. Much of what the nation remembers of Dr. King, and the great social reform movement he led, was documented by Mr. Hampton in a film that is both transformative and bittersweet.

From its inception, the Festival has saluted the emergence of African filmmakers. All the more it has helped the public better understand the importance of film to Africa's modernity as well as the complex individual and national identities that are coming into focus across the continent. Back to Africa, a film that is symbolic of the contemporary cinematic scene in Nigeria, will strike some as an African soap opera, but it has a much deeper message about familial longing dramatized through the cultural awakening of an African American woman in the land of her estranged father.

In keeping with the Festival's penchant for the unconventional, this year it will screen films with an edge, including the urban drama Blackout, King Vidor's wondrously vintage film Hallelujah!, and the spiritually uplifting opus The Ditchdigger's Daughters.

The Festival will close with the 2008 Paul Robeson Awards, marking another memorable film ritual in the Garden State. Since 1986, the Festival has honored Mr. Robeson's extraordinary legacy on film, the international stage and in social activism. Over the years, the Festival has screened all of Robeson's films, inviting the nation's leading authorities on black film as an artistic genre.

We suspect Mr. Robeson, who is the veritable patron saint of black cinema, would be pleased with what has become of his legacy on the silver screen. Black film, now diverse and diasporic in reach and impact, mirrors what he sought to achieve more than a generation ago: a credible and believable presentation of the richness of black life on the silver screen.

Now, we can lower the lights.

Dr. Clement Alexander Price
Member, Newark Black Film Festival Selection Committee

P.S. We are proud to acknowledge that over the past 33 years, the Festival has screened 650 films to an audience of over 147,000 adults and children.
